A flit of Western Justice.

A western court of justice is often a roene of wild and picturesque excitemen not to say diso der. Such a scene occurred in a justice's court room at SIIver City, A. T. The case was the trial of an Indian arrested for stealing a horse warm color of a one-cent piece fresh from the mint. His long, black hair was brushed straight back from the low, simal up like a pompon, caught on the top of his head with a piece of red ribbon, while long heavy braids hung down over his shoulders, falling across his broad chest, and tied with silk floss of a dozen different bright colors. A long Navajo blanket that hung in graceful folds over his shoulders completed an attractive picture of a perfect type of the fast vanishing race.

When the constable entered the court room with the prisoner, one of the accusers, with an oath, bawled out that he would lynch the red devil. At this the other two took up the strain and started in to run the court.

Here the justice, though an old man showed his spirit, and jumping on to the Complete line of Lamps, Lanterns and man and a fightin' man," and that he'd have order in that court or he'd have

THE ORANG-GUTANG. The Glant Ape's Rapid Progress in the Jungle Through the Tree Tops. It is a most interesting sight to watch an orang-outang make its way through the sungle. It walks slowly along the larger branches in a semi-crect attitude, this being apparently caused by the length of its arms and the shorte se of its legs. It invariably selects those branches which intermingle with those of a neighboring tree, on approaching which it stretches out its long arms, and, grasping the boughs opposite, seems first to shake them as if to test their strength, and then deliberately swings itself across to the next brauch, which it walks along as before. It does not jump or spring as monkeys usually do, and never appears to hurry itself unless some real danger presents. Yet in Big Inducements to Good Agents, spite of its apparently slow movements it gets along far quicker than a person

THE GREGG ELECTRIC CURE CO., running through the forest beneath. Various stories are told about its huge dimensions and great height, but I have never seen one ever four feet high from head to heel, and from seven to eight feet measuring from finger to linger across its outstretched arms, the width of the face varying in measurement from eight to twelve inches, though the accounts of larger animals having been met with may be correct. The tradition of the Dyaks is that there is no animal in the jungle that dare attack the orang-outing except the python and the crocodile. At times. when there is no fruit attainable in the jungle, it wanders down to the rivers to search for palm shoots along their banks. Then it is the Dyaks who relate how the wily crocodile will sometimes try and seize it by the leg and drag it under the water and into the slimy mud below, but the orang-outang, according to their accounts, soon gets the best of the struggle, and the crocodile is either beaten to death witl: its powerful arms and feet or torn to pieces. But, on the other hand, it is seldom able to kill the python, who, with its deadly embrace, soon puts an end to the great manlike ape of Borneo.
